THE P-TOWN HAPS

Happy Heart Month! And if you're not into cheesy dinner dates or cardiovascular health, then this might not be one of your favorite months. Fear not—we have some stupendous alternative V-Day options for you to consider. The only caveat? You need to read this whole column to have said alternatives bestowed upon you...or just skip to the similarly named heading. But that's like cheating, and there's no honor in that, so read on, my dear Erotic City devotees!

No February would be complete without some anniversaries. We have two for you! Lucky Devil Lounge is celebrating its 15th year of awesomeness on Thursday, February 9. It's gonna be quite the shindig, with free catered food, a photo booth, and two dancers on stage all night long! We'd also like to congratulate Victress Entertainment on its 4-year anniversary! Stop by their private lingerie modeling studio at 7303 Southeast 82nd Avenue for a sizzling "anniversary month" private show.

We've got a few birthdays this month, too! On Sunday, February 5, Soul is celebrating her birthday with a Secret Agent Stripparaoke Birthday Party at Devils Point from 9 p.m. to close. Don't forget to wear black—it's part of your mission, should you choose to accept it (and even if you don't). Then, on Saturday, February 18, it's Chevelle's Birthday Bash at Stars Cabaret in Salem. Happy birthday, Soul and Chevelle!

Lastly, we'd like to announce the Taboo Ice Cream Social on Friday, February 10, at Taboo Video in Vancouver. Ice cream sundaes will be served by "scantily clad beefcake and cheesecake individuals," according to their ad. Sounds like our kind of dessert shop-pe! Lick it fast before it drips...

V-DAY IDEAS

As promised, here are your non-conforming Valentine's Day suggestions for those easily nauseated folks:

On Valentine's Day proper, Stars Cabaret (Bridgeport) is holding their "My Bloody Valentine Party," complete with killer drinks, killer treats, and of course, killer dancers! Don't miss the fun!

Next, Dick Hennessy brings you "Count Dickula's Vampentine's Hotel" on Friday, February 17, and Saturday, February 18, at Guilty Pleasures. Check out their ad this month for details and ticket info!

Five Things To Ask Your Friend Who Has A Gig Instead of “What Time Are You Going On?”

By Blazer Sparrow

First off, shut up. I am the words on the page, and you are a nudity consumer, so sit down and listen. And by listen—I mean read. I know you have work in the morning. Or are you trying to juggle multiple commitments you made that night cause you're so popular—slash—have zero time management skills? I don't wanna hear it. Please don't show up five minutes into your friends' set only to bounce after an unenthused “good show.” On the local level, cross-pollination is literally the only way up-and-coming acts can grow a fanbase. You show up for the opener and you stay for the closer. Your feet hurt? Sit down. You're bored? Go get a drink. You're horny? Have a wank in the bathroom like a grown-ass adult!

I'm only telling you this for your own good. If you wonder why the dude you knew in high school who played with Portugal. The Man for a year doesn't invite you to the sex and coke parties, it's 'cause you continuously asked him this question when he told you about his shitty band's gig at some community center or local dive bar, in the hometown you're both trying to forget exists.

Next time your annoying friend, who is still playing in bands for some reason, texts you about their upcoming cry for attention, try texting these five zingers in response. I know you're super busy with your coding job that—due to inflation—basically pays minimum wage these days, but since it's February and love is in the air, why not say something sweet? Something supportive? Don't treat your musician friend like some cheap dick appointment. Make them feel loved, and maybe in the highly unlikely chance they do make it in the industry, they'll invite you to the sex and coke parties. You're welcome, nudity consumer.

When's Load In? I Can Help!

Unless they're a super smart laptop DJ, your friend is probably a dumbass who is in a band with heavy things like amps and drums. Some all-tube bass amps can weigh up to 80 fucking pounds. Don't just show up for most of their set. Show up for the hard part as well! I guarantee your buddy's musical project doesn't have roadies. And if they're from Portland, they probably don't have a lot of upper-body strength, either. Be a pal.

How Many Friends Should I Bring?

If you're just gonna stand in the back and feign interest like an embarrassed parent at their child's recital, at least bring some other warm bodies so your dysfunctional friend can feel like they're doing something worthwhile with their life. To be clear, you don't have to actually bring anyone to your sad friend's show, but this text alone would make their day, rather than the usual “What time can I maybe show up, if I'm feeling generous?” text.

Do You Guys Have Merch?

Hopefully not, and you don't have to buy anything and waste any more money (especially if there's a cover.) But hey, it's the thought that counts. Bonus points if they don't actually have any merch because you can sound like you're genuinely interested in their little substitute for therapy, and they get to feel cool by using words like “yet” and “soon,” as if they're actually gonna put any money into actually making fucking T-shirts. Everyone wins.

What Kind Of Beer Do You Like?

Without exception, every venue (at least in Portland) will always and forever only offer two complimentary drink tickets for each performer of the evening. If you didn't already know, your musician friend is somewhere on the spectrum from a highly functioning to barely ambulatory alcoholic. Two drinks just aren't gonna cut it. You could be the true and understanding friend that has a six-pack waiting in the car for them to sneak off and imbibe. It's not enabling—it's supporting!

How Much Cocaine Should I Bring?

It would just be plain silly to ask if you should bring any. Of course you should! These are people your age, still playing for a handful of locals in a bar. Clearly, something has gone really wrong somewhere along their emotional development, and that void ain't gonna fill itself. Don't give them the option to pretend they don't want any. Just be straight up. Is this a “half-a-G for us to key bump in the bathroom” kinda show, or a “full 8-ball to do lines off CD cases in the van” kinda show?

Or if you really don't want to go, you can just leave them on read. They'll understand. Just don't ask them what time they're playing. They don't fucking know. The sound guy doesn't know. The guy who booked the show doesn't even know. Don't rub it in.

Happy Valentine's Day.

Some Stuff About Dogs

BY ESMERALDA RUPP-SPANGLE

Cats are simple and easy. Right now, a large percentage of us have these tiny predators snoozing by us, just waiting for the opportunity to eat us after we've shucked off this mortal coil. To cats, we are "the help," barely worth acknowledging unless our service is required. Animate can openers. Cats are entitled nihilists, sociopaths even—more human than humans, though they'd surely resent the comparison.

Gotcha, yer yawning now...mind control is real

Dogs are different. They've been bred to be "man's best friend." I've always been fascinated by the idea of harnessing something as powerful and proud, as strong and fierce as a wolf, and then transmuting its form into a tiny, cantankerous ankle biter. Modern dogs lack the wild elegance of a wolf, surely, but where efficiency and ferocity have been subtracted, absolute loyalty and unconditional love have been transposed. Also, implanted with a strange combination of incredible intelligence and utter idiocy—animals that can detect seizures before even those who suffer from them do, but also who couldn't be happier than when eating cat shit.

The first members of the dog family, Canidae, appeared 40 million years ago. These would have been basically just wolves. It took millennia before humans realized these doggos could be harnessed into strange, new shapes and sizes and used for more than basic protection and labor. Once we did, shit was unreal.

Facts are boring – eating cat shit rules

For those among us who love our retarded wolves, here are some random and unusual facts to retain or forget as you see fit.

There are two wolves, one is dead because he was eaten by maggots

Birdstrike is a major problem for airplanes. As I've mentioned in at least two previous articles (one referencing the amazing "chicken cannon," which I highly recommend Googling), this hazard is an ongoing problem at airbases and airports worldwide. One pigeon in the salad shooter blades of a 747 may not be a big deal, but how about a whole flock? The winner in Turkey Vulture vs. Biplane is a foregone conclusion. Scarecrows don't work for more than a short duration, loud music or even recordings of tortured birds don't work, laser lights are a non-option for obvious reasons, and despite the fact that giant, screaming, mechanical air demons are going aloft on a regular basis at these places, birds just can't seem to be deterred. Enter the "Tarmac dog." One of the only (if not THE only) consistently effective deterrents against birds at airfields. Unrelenting, passionate about their work, available for overtime, holidays, and weekends, and work for scraps. Best of all, they look better in hi-vis vests than any human ever could. Who's a good boy?

Dachshunds, AKA wiener dogs. Damn, they're cute. Sometimes a bit bitey-bitey. Prone to arthritis and also a host of other joint problems, these wacky little creatures are, in some ways, mystifying in their shape and size. How would humans ever breed a wolf into the shape of a literal sausage? How long must it have taken to get them into this form? Most importantly...WHY? The answer is badgers. That's right. These wee little animate hotdogs were bred to exterminate one of the most vicious and insidious predatory mammals known to man, and damn if they weren't good at

it. Think of it—those tiny, squirmy bodies are perfect for fitting into the con-finer of a badger tunnel, and their wee, needle teeth great for tearing flesh and bone. The overlap between bloody, mortal injury, and "looks great in a sausage costume" is narrower than you'd think.

A dog's nose print is unique, just like our fingerprints. This means if you're planning on committing crimes with your dog, get them a rubber nose cover or something. Make sure that bitch Dolly takes the fall, at the very least.

When dogs appear to mimic catlike behavior, kicking dirt over their piss or poo, they're actually doing the opposite. Cats are known for their "cleanliness" (those of us who've had them know this is a veneer, but whatever) in burying their splatter dumps, but when dogs appear to "kick up soil" in your yard (or god forgive, cat box), they're not trying to hide it at all. In fact, their goal is to spread the smell, not confine it. Maybe this is why dog litter boxes aren't a thing.

Greyhounds. Under the right circumstances, these smooth-brained, streamlined, loongdoogs can beat cheetahs in a race. While cheetahs can run twice as fast as greyhounds for a short haul, they can really just keep up that 70 mph speed for about thirty seconds. A Greyhound can maintain a 35 mph speed for about seven miles. So, the cheetah may start first, but a greyhound will soon overtake them. Proof positive that Chester Cheetah needs that sweet, sweet cheese powder to keep his shit in gear.

The smallest adult dog ever recorded was Miracle Milly, the Chihuahua. Born in 2011, Milly was under 4 inches tall and weighed in at about one pound. On the other hand, a Mastiff named Zorba has been considered the world's overall largest dog ever. Zorba weighed about 343 lbs and measured over eight feet from his nose to his tail. He was, at one point, described as being about the size of a small donkey. I'm definitely left wondering how awesome riding on the back of a doggo like that would have been as a kid. Or, like, now would be okay, too, if the dog was big enough and could fly and journey into dreams and stuff, or whatever.

There is a real likelihood that this is going to be part 1 of 50 or so, as in the writing of this, I ran up against a wall of time, space, and intent—weighed against the sheer quantity of wonderful things I've come across making this for you kids.

PROBLEM CHILDREN

THE PORN CLERK CHRONICLES:

THE PROBLEM CHILDREN

By Atticus Rex

My customers are a big part of what makes my job enjoyable! However, there is that small percentage that makes it challenging and sometimes a living hell. These individuals, we call, The Problem Children.

Problem Children are reoccurring, former customers who have been permanently kicked out, also known as 86'd. Unlike most people who are 86'd from establishments, these particular customers keep trying to come back, even after being relentlessly told not to. We have Problem Children who were banned several years ago who still make multiple attempts to fool the new hires. Unbeknownst to them, the reoccurring Problem Children are the first ones we make sure the newbies are familiar with.

Now, before I continue...to appease the masses, I want to make sure it's understood that my viewpoint on individuals experiencing homelessness, addiction, and mental health issues is not being painted in an unfair and biased light. I have experienced the trifecta of these issues. I used to be that homeless drug addict sleeping on the streets. So, before anybody passes judgment with unfair or prejudiced accusations, I have witnessed firsthand what that particular clientele goes through. Although it has made me more empathic towards those still suffering, I have a job to do, a business to run, and people to protect.

I do have customers that are still homeless and addicted to various substances that don't cause me problems. Some of them are my favorite customers, and a few have become my friends. They sometimes help me remove a particularly stubborn, belligerent, or dangerous customer, and I couldn't be more grateful for them. They are some of the most genuine and wonderful people I've ever known.

Since we lack security or a bouncer at the store I run, we all must learn to be comfortable with confrontation and learn to de-escalate a potentially dangerous situation. The hardest part of being a new hire is to learn and understand the balance of being firm—but not unreasonable—to customers who break the rules. Unfortunately, the only way to learn is through trial and error, and it's not easy. You can always spot the veterans who have been in the business for a long time and have honed their tactics to perfection. But sometimes, even the most seasoned workers are no match for these people.

An interaction with a Problem Child usually comes with phases. Depending on the severity of the individual's past behavior, it starts with an immediate fight-or-flight instinct. The rush of adrenaline when you are preparing yourself to make smart choices amid an emergency is not a feeling you can recreate. But all you can do is prepare yourself.

Not too long ago, I had one of our troublemakers throw a rock through our window. He became angry at me when he attempted to sneak past me into the store without me noticing. Not being able to hide from me, I reminded him that he wasn't allowed on the premises and that he needed to leave. This was enough for him to throw a temper tantrum that even Veruca Salt would envy. He did end up leaving, but no more than three minutes later, I heard this horrible crashing sound. My gut knew what that sound was before my brain could even comprehend what was happening. Since I had three customers on the floor, I switched into crisis mode and ran to lock the door. Peering out past the door, I saw that same Problem Child who attempted to come in. This time, he was armed with rocks. Unfortunately, before I was even connected to the city's emergency dispatching line, Problem Child was nowhere to be found. Even after the process of filing a police report, there isn't a whole lot left to do.

My first Christmas season at the store I now run is one of my best stories. I was still relatively new, having been there only a few months. I had worked at a different store in another part of the same city for a little over a year. Because it's hard to find decent people to work at any adult store and to stay for longer than a few months, promotions can happen relatively quickly if you work hard. And although part of the same company, each individual store is vastly different than the other. It took me the better part of a year to get fully settled at my new location. With that being said, sometimes it takes an experimental approach to find out who is and who isn't allowed within the premises.

Earlier that week, I had already left work when I received a call from my night shift employee. They told me that there was a known Problem Child who refused to leave the area. He was previously in the store but was now hanging out at the entrance blocking foot traffic. A call to the police was already made, but they wanted some backup since this person had already been proven to be violent.

I headed back to the store, crossing the one main street that separates the nice part of the city from the gritty neighborhood where my store is located. As I rounded the corner, I recognized the man loitering at the entrance from his most recent mugshot. Even though I knew it was a fruitless attempt, I approached him and politely asked him to leave, and as I expected, he refused. I asked again, this time adding an edge to my voice. He answered with a slew of insults meant to get under my skin. My employee saw me and unlocked the door, letting me in the store. Already on the phone with the police, all we could do was wait it out.

In most cases, the perpetrator will leave before help arrives. Often, it's a relief, but for repeat offenders, it's disheartening because they will be back again and again and again. However, this guy stayed long enough for a police officer to arrive. The guy saw the officer coming and tried to run but ended up being restrained, yet continued to thrash around. We then both gave our official statement and went on with our lives.

A couple of days went by, and on a relatively slow weekday, the door alarm went off, indicating that someone had entered the store. I looked up from what I was doing to greet the customer, but instead, I was greeting the same guy from that night the police were called. The Problem Child ignored my protests and headed for the arcade; I immediately called 911. Because I had already pressed charges against the guy, the arrival time would be much faster. In less than 20 minutes, two police officers walked in. I handed them the keys to the arcade, and they headed into the back. In this circumstance, I locked the front door. The handful of times that we've needed a police response in the arcade, it always ends up killing arcade foot traffic for obvious reasons. The arcade is a very delicate ecosystem that thrives on a delicate balance of having the right environment. Once that environment is disrupted, it kills everything. It also looks poorly upon the establishment, having law enforcement on the premises.

As the two police officers headed to the back, I remained at the counter and tried to stay out of the way. At first, I heard some unintelligible voices and then a loud bang, followed by yelling. One of the officers called my name, and I ran into the back. Since the arcade is supposed to be dark, with only several ill-defined red and purple lights, it was hard to make out what was going on. As my eyes adjusted to the dark, I saw one officer pinning the trespasser down. One of the officers asked if there was a way to turn a brighter light on, which of course, I couldn't, and told her so. There was some more shouting, and I ran to grab one of our flashlights. Before I had even reached the counter, there was another loud banging sound, and the two officers emerged from the arcade; one of them had a bruised and bloody eye. Someone had obviously hit him in the face. It was—you guessed it—the Problem Child.

Luckily for me, this guy made the stupid decision to punch a police officer in the face and was sent to prison. I even had to testify at his sentencing trial, and so far, I've never seen him again—a rare end to a common Problem Child tale.

WHAT YOU CAN DO WITH ALL THAT FREE TIME YOU HAVE

BY HANNAH ONE CUP

Truly, everyone has at least 10 minutes of free time in a day. Whether it's a work break or a day off (I hear some people saying, what the hell is that?), even if it's not a full day, you have time to blink your eyes open and realize it's a whole new day to start some fresh bullshit and pretend like you're going to go start painting the Mona Lisa. Or at least make coffee and scowl at the plants you're probably going to get to watering the next time you have five free minutes. You've already neglected them for two months...what're another few days? Are they even still alive anymore?

Anyway, let's get better at that, shall we? I have come up with a short list of things you should try incorporating into your already extremely busy day. If you're me, and you work from home, getting the wheel rolling is a whole lot harder than it sounds. Apathy is real, and it's a lie! ADHD, on the other hand, is also real, and there's medication for that, so go get that taken care of first. Or don't. Maybe do that on another day you have free. Or at least put it in your phone somewhere for this coming August? Yeah, that sounds about the right time.

These suggestions are generally simple. The problem is that apathy bitch, and that overwhelming feeling of dread and sedation when your list of to-do items grows longer than two. Don't go back to bed and nap; let's get you whelmed with energy.

1. Sit in your chair or on your couch at home, and stare at the blank TV screen or wall. Don't turn that thing on. Once you turn it on, you're never leaving. All your "free time" will suddenly be gone when you've realized you've watched six seasons of Homicide Hunter: Lt. Joe Kenda. (Side note, I wish he was my uncle.)

Sitting and staring at the powered-down television set will make you realize how much time you have spent sitting in front of a screen and how dirty your couch is. In five minutes' time, or after your coffee or whatever liquored-up drink you're having, you'll suddenly see yourself cleaning the couch cushions and finding all sorts of fun things. Coins, pieces of candy from last Halloween, a dog collar you swore you lost (because you don't have a dog and haven't had anyone to put it on you lately), a vibrator, and popcorn. Always popcorn or corn nuts. What the hell is up with nuts?

2. Make some soup. Now, this one actually takes some time and ingredients. But honestly, soup is whatever you want it to be, so just throw whatever you have into a pot with some water and salt. It's going to be fine. Or it won't be, in which case this gets you out of the house—so, win-win? Either way, while you're sitting around waiting for soup to do soup things, you now have free time to do something else. Let's get wild here...

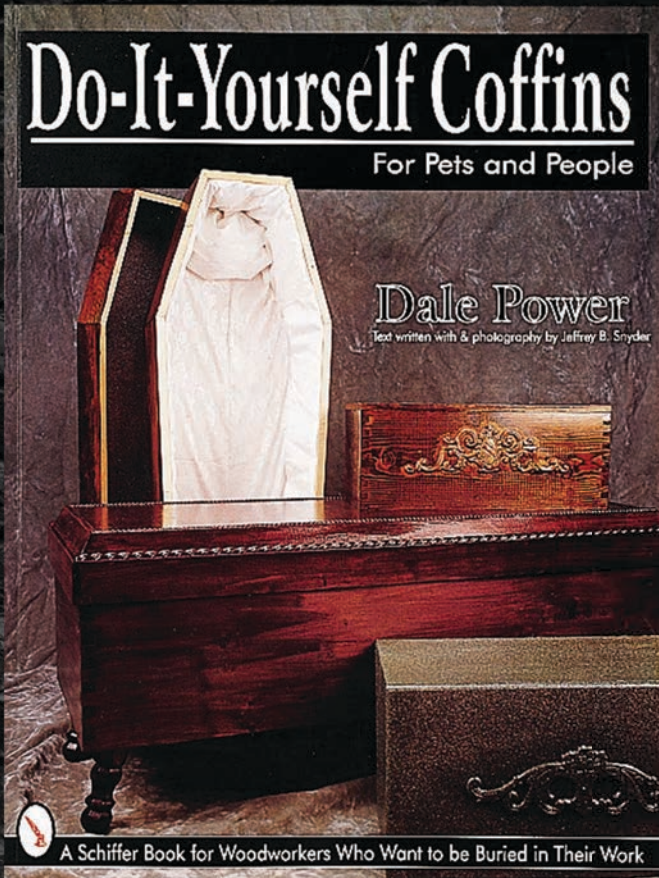

3. Do yoga. While the soup is souping about, put on a Yoga With Adrien: Yoga for the Service Industry. It's 15 minutes long and well worth the time in front of the TV. Oh yeah, turn the tv on. I know I said to keep it off, but I kind of doubt you did that part, so just switch your TV from Hulu to YouTube, and do this one thing. Then go look up my soup channel and subscribe. I'm kidding. I haven't started that...yet. I'll keep you all posted.

4. Go on Groupon and find some cheap activities to try out. I'm going to be honest, I have 20 dollars in Groupon monies sitting there, and I have yet to find something I can get my apathetic ass up to do. But the advice is sound. Maybe try one of those escape rooms or perhaps a cooking class if you're worried about your soup's level of poison. Or, you can go play a stupid round of golf? I highly recommend not golfing; it's so stupid and a waste of geographical space. Two things I think have caused the most damage to this planet are golf and sheep—and I don't like either one. But if it gets you out of the house, and if you can do it for less than 20 dollars (free is better), then go do it. Whatever gets you away from the nothingness you continue doing with your free time, I will...support, I suppose.

5. Pick up one of the books you have for some reason and try reading a chapter. Sure, this book is probably from when you were in high school or something you borrowed and never returned (because you never read it). But try reading one chapter. If you hate it, put it down and wonder why the hell it's still in your possession, and go to the bookstore to get a new book to sit around and try to read. Each new book you collect makes you look that much more intelligent and well-read for future mates. Soon, you'll get some human person to come into your house, and you'll have a floor of books (because you never bought a bookshelf), and they'll say something like, "Wow, did you really read Do-It-Yourself Coffins for Pets and People? I found that book super enlightening. I have actually started building a coffin of my own. I can show you sometime."

6. That's when you tell this person to politely get the fuck out and never come back.

That also got you out of having to pretend to know anything about the book or give an answer as to why you have this book to begin with—since we know you won't pick up coffin building anytime soon as a project, let alone try reading a book on it. I mean, you're reading a thousand-word article in a strip club or bar. Be realistic, like me. But look what happened? Someone came to your house and commented on your massive collection of six books, sitting on your floor...albeit picking the strangest one to comment on. I'd say it's about time to eat soup. So, go eat your soup. You deserve it.

7. After the soup is done being eaten, I believe it's time for a well-deserved break. So go find that vibrator you rediscovered in your couch, clean it very well and enjoy.

That, my friends, are seven pretty decent recommendations on what to do with your free time when you have it. Note that not one of these asked you to interact with another person besides telling someone to get the fuck out of your house. Doesn't that make you warm inside, knowing that you can probably accomplish these things all by yourself?

Hannah One Cup can be found reading about old tractors and practicing toilet paper origami with these new books she found at the bookstore. She's also in the process of making soup for millions while simultaneously hoping she hasn't accidentally put poison in it. Sometimes arsenic and olive oil just look the same, am I right? She can be found on Facebook by her name.

BY WOMBSTRETCHA THE MAGNIFICENT

FETISHES FOR THE BOLD

At times in all of our lives, we need something extra. A little oomph to spice up an otherwise dreary or monotonous existence. Some people do things like ride rollercoasters, go skydiving, learn the bagpipes, travel to foreign lands, eat gas station sushi, or have their pet orangutan start bar fights. Some, however, take it straight to the bedroom. Nothing wrong at all with having a diverse sex life, but some people take it a tad too far. What is “too far?” Well, I’d define it as something that, if you went to a seedy sex club and brought it up to the guy wearing a diaper and holding a Wiffle bat (AKA Steve), he’d look at you like you were the weirdo. The formal definition of a sexual fetish, for our knowledge, is sexual arousal related to an action, object, or body part not normally considered sexual. I’ve thus taken it upon myself to do exhaustive research in an attempt to uncover and document unusual sexual fetishes for, um...science.

Don’t try this at home. Or do. I’m not here to judge.

Listed in no particular order.

Forniphilia

Forniphilia, also known as a “human furniture fetish,” is when a (living) person is turned into functional furniture for use by others who are presumably also into this business. I think it’d be odd if you both weren’t into it. “Hi, dear, I’m home from... oh, you’re a coffee table again. Hmm, at least there’s a snack tray.” I’m not entirely sure how someone determines that they have this one, either. Most sexual fetishes are based on a formative, pleasurable experience with said thing, but how many people have any experience at all with either being furniture or wanting to use furniture made of someone else? Did they have a particularly sexy ottoman as a teenager? A foxy coat rack? Some questions might never be answered.

Coulrophilia

Coulrophilia is a sexual attraction to clowns. Yes, clowns. I can only imagine the dwelling of someone with this fetish. Their Blu-ray collection probably has both versions of IT, Killer Klowns from Outer Space, Joker, C-SPAN recordings of Congress, and so forth. They likely have a secret box full of sweaty, used red noses and a penchant for yelling, “Oh, Bozo! Honk harder!” during sex. Given the widespread fear of clowns (coulrophobia), there are probably a lot of lonely coulrophiles out there, just waiting for someone to fill those big shoes.

Licking Doorknobs

There isn’t even a Greek word for this one. As with all properly bizarre sex stuff, this one originated in Japan. Ostensibly, it began as some kind of protest against their absolutely weird pornography censorship laws. Anyone who has ever seen Japanese porn knows that they have to censor it in all sorts of wacky ways. How lame. Often, they censor all the “nasty bits” but leave the rest alone. Who wants that? It’s like sacks of Japanese flesh slapping together without the naughty parts visible. No wonder Japan is so pent-up. I mean, these are the people who brought us bukkake, so what gives? Anyhow, what do doorknobs—and licking them—have to do with protesting for less censorship? The idea was that they’d perform erotic acts in a way that completely dodges the censors, by licking doorknobs, of all things, to show how silly the whole business is. Inevitably, what started as a pseudo-erotic joke, began giving people boners in short order. It became a big hit, and people all over the globe took up the practice with seriousness, as evidenced by YouTube during the COVID lockdowns. I certainly hope they Lysol the knobs before licking them. But then again...some like it dirty.

Alien Impregnation

This fetish involves a sexual desire for being impregnated by an alien or possibly a very large insect. "How the hell do you do that?" you may ask. Apart from making contact with an alien race that desires to impregnate you (also known as "the hard way"), your safest bet is to purchase a sex toy specifically designed to fill this niche. Yes, they make these. Apparently, there is actually quite the panoply of them out there. They're shaped like alien or insectoid ovipositors and have a canal through which you can squeeze presumably well-lubricated alien "eggs," which are bundled with the product. After this odd purchase, you go to town (or maybe to space) and squeeze the eggs into the orifice of your choice. That, or really spice up your arsenal for the next inter-office Nerf gun fight. The toys will set you back anywhere from one to 500 dollars. For the curious, aroused, or curiously aroused, search "ovipositor sex toy" and behold the spread. Interestingly, this one did not originate in Japan.

Formicophilia

Are you one of those people who flips out when they run into a spider web or instantly go for the bug spray as soon as they see a mosquito? This one's not for you, then. Formicophilia is when someone has a sexual fetish for being crawled on or bitten by bugs. Those who are into this simply put bugs on their body and revel in the delights of tiny little legs crawling all over them. I bet those agricultural supply places that sell gallon jugs of ladybugs are unwittingly enabling these people. Unsurprisingly, this is a popular fetish among entomologists. Whether they got into studying bugs because they were aroused by them, or whether they studied bugs and became aroused by them, we will likely never find out. They won't tell us, either. Entomologists are a tight-lipped bunch.

Dacryphilia

Being aroused by the tears of other people. I suppose the old wisdom applies... the lap dance is so much better when the stripper is crying.

Splashing

Also known as "wet and messy" fetishism (or WAM for short), this practice is where a person is aroused by the sensation of wet and/or messy substances against their skin or becomes aroused by watching this happen to others. Common themes include having foodstuffs or other viscous things dumped into clothing while it's still being worn, sitting on desserts such as cakes or pies while nude, or having slime dumped over their heads. Another interesting facet of this fetish is the gunk tank, which presumably is a derivative of "dunk tank," as that is what it is: a dunk tank filled with gunk. Gunk being things like pudding, gelatin, or baked beans. Yup, baked beans come into play here. Clinicians studying this fetish (apparently, people do indeed get paid to research splashing) have not found any conclusive factors which might lead someone to develop this fetish, but the common speculation is that they were the ones who deliberately dumped their food on themselves when they were very young. My hypothesis is that they just watched too much "You Can't Do That On Television" as kids. Something about Moose getting that slime on her head must have set their mental programming a little bit off.

There we have it. Those are some of the most unusual fetishes I could find, which had documented and widespread occurrences. To each their own when it comes to getting your rocks off, I suppose. However, if you say you're into any of those listed above, you'll probably get anywhere from a Spock-style raised eyebrow to people running out of the room seeking memory-erasing drugs. If you're lucky, you'll find someone who says, "tell me more." I also have the distinct feeling I'm going to be getting nasty emails from baked bean, er, "enthusiasts" after this one.

Stay safe, and make St. Valentine ashamed of you!
